I'm still a Netrunner player.

...Even though I only play games on Jinteki.net once in awhile. I mean, I would rather want to play at a game store or outside somewhere.

But in case if you don't know, I dedicated myself to this game when it first came out in 2012.

Just look at these old screencaps:

Hello Everyone,

Last week I had the fortune to attend a tournament at Redcap's Corner in Philadelphia with the Philly usual suspects and a lot of newcomers. 22 people were in attendance and I have to say it that it was one of the most enjoyable small tournaments I have participated in. The field was full of interesting decks, strong competitors and a friendly, love of the game atmosphere.

We played five rounds of swiss with no cut to top 8, letting strength of schedule break ties. For me, the highlights were splitting with the world champ Dan D'Argenio in our match and facing off against a very effective Tennin grail build as well as a hostile infrastructure Replicating Perfection deck.

I ended up finishing in the middle of the pack due to some key mistakes and the world champ took the day by a single strength of schedule point from another Philly local.

When you look at the tournament as a whole a few interesting trends emerge centered around the That's right. From 2012 to 2016, I was an avid Android: Netrunner player.

My team played at Wegman's in King of Prussia, Pennsylvania. It was on both Monday and Tuesday nights. Sometimes I would play in Philly, other times in Delaware.

Things got dumb in 2018 with the "revised" core set. Fantasy Flight really exploited everyone with the game. As if anyone wants to play Keyforge today.

I also knew Dan D'Argenio, the two-time Netrunner World Champion from Philly. I even did a podcast with him on The Stark Truth.

He was appalled when he found out I was an "Asian Aryan."

He even sent me a nasty email. "Fuck you!"

...Well, I think he's an arrogant pu33y who smokes too much cigarettes. And fuck "doomriders," you sissy metal band f8gg0t.

Otherwise, I will be happy to return to the hobby when the game starts up again.

Fantasy Flight pulled the plug. It's their fault. Bad company. The owner is a loser.

If anyone wants to play me in Netrunner, send me a letter. We can play online or in person.
